

How to become an informed energy-literate consumer This morning you balanced your checkbook with an automatic withdrawal of over $400 for gas and electric for your 4,000 square-foot home. On your way to the airport you filled up your SUV for over $70. You are spending a lot more than you spent last year for your morning cornflakes, the rib-eye steak you had last night and the corn squeezins from the local moonshiner. You're mad as hell and want to know what's going on. Are you being gouged? Do the energy companies really earn obscene profits? What's with a new energy policy coming out of Congress every year? Confessions of an Energy Price Forecaster gives you answers. But more importantly it helps you understand where these prices are going. After all, you already paid for today's energy. It is really all about being able to plan for the future.
