

The Illusion of Being a Black Man: Behind the Smoke and Mirrors

Never before in our history have there been more fathers absent from black families, more struggling single mothers, and more children headed down the wrong path than there are today. Domestic, gang, young, and gun violence is so consistently reported on the nightly news that no one is surprised to hear about it. Yet there are neighborhood wars taking place in most of this country's inner city neighborhoods that few outside of law enforcement know about. Wealth, wrongly defined by material possessions, is no longer passed on to the next generation, and is nothing more than a pipe dream for those who do not know what it truly is. Examples of achievement have been narrowed down to entertainers and professional athletes. Realistic role models are almost extinct. With over seven thousand students a day dropping out of school, educators are losing too many young people to not classify this as an epidemic this country can't afford. Prisons are overflowing with majority black populations and as soon as one bed becomes empty there are at least two blacks convicted of felonies waiting to fill it. The Illusion of Being a Black Man uncovers issues leading to the rapid destruction of families. Its shockingly straightforward approach provides real world experience and powerful insight to families and individuals in need of positive change to survive. The author Dr. Ray Ransom re-paves the path to a better future in this easy to read volume.
