

Hunting the Haunted: Booger Tales - One

315 pages (print edition), 55,500 words, Appalachian ghost stories & haunted houses By coincidence, Peggy meets a ghost hunter at a book signing. He wants her to take him on a tour of local haunted places. Some of her friends decide to go along. Fascinated by the experience, she does some more ghost hunting and research on her own. In this book Peggy departs from her typical novel writing and tells of haunted places and ghost hunting. Plus she retells her familys ghost stories as well as collecting and retelling others stories in Ashe, Watauga, Avery, and Mitchell counties in northwestern North Carolina.

From the The Ghost Hunter chapter: In 2004 during a book signing at the Todd General Store in Todd, North Carolina a nice looking man, medium tall, strongly built, and around age forty showed up. He said he was a ghost hunter. (He also told his name, but it has long slipped my memory.) Trying not to grin, I looked him over more closely. A good look always tells you more about a person than what they say. I had an idea he might be teasing about calling himself a ghost hunter, but he appeared to be serious in his self-description. A ghost hunter. Really? I questioned him. Right, he answered in all sincerity. Ive traveled all over the United States in search of ghosts. Find any? I quipped, still thinking he might be pulling my leg, but he took my question to be sincere. Thousands. Sure, I thought. Now he was joking with me. How do you know they were ghosts? I continued, and this time I smiled as I looked up at him. He was tall compared to me. I got their orbs on camera. He smiled back. Orbs? His smile faded and he frowned at me. Dont tell me you dont know what an orb is. I thought a writer would be well-versed on orbs and spirits. I wasnt. We made eye contact, but we werent exactly communicating. I thought he was slightly odd and Im sure he was thinking the same thing about me.

Always ready to admit when I didnt know about something, I shook my head to let him know I was not informed about orbs. An orb is a unit of energy that a camera can reflect on film. You see, ghosts give off an energy force that a camera can pick up, he explained, more than willing to feed me information in an effort to educate me a little on orbs and ghosts. Really? I continued. Really. Would you like to see some pictures of orbs that Ive taken? I sure as shootin would. I was willing for him to back-up his claims about seeing ghosts. He pulled out his camera bag, unzipped it, and handed me several pictures. This one is the ghost in Asheville at the Biltmore House. I had to get special permission to shoot these shots when no one else was around. I took the picture in my hand and looked closely. Much to my surprise, there was a misty shape of a woman at the top of stairs, and she kind of had a face. Thats the ghost? I asked, still a bit skeptical, to say the least. Thats her, he said proudly. I was lucky that time. I got her picture when a lot of others havent. Shes rather illusive and very shy, doesnt like showing herself when a cameras around. In return, I told him about some of the haunted houses and ghosts stories I grew up with. My stories were like holding sweet candy in a babys face. Temptation was great! Lets go find em, he said to me with enthusiasm and without hesitation. I laughed. Cant. Im stuck at this book signing. All day? All day. Tell me where the haunted places are located? Ill go by myself. Ever try to tell a person whos not from the mountains how to find remote hollows and deserted houses along the winding mountain roads? It cant be done. Ill buy a map, he said at my obvious hesitation. You can mark and X. I shook my head at his suggestion. An X wouldnt give enough information on how to find my haunted places. Ill be lucky to find them much less tell you where they are. Then tell me a time when youre free ...
